

Supervision letter

Research areas and topics

I supervise bachelor projects and master theses, primarily within cognitive psychology and, in particular, vision science. My research focuses on the fundamentals of visual perception and attention, and on how our visual system changes with experience. I have also worked with applications of vision science in areas including hearing loss intervention, pediatric neuro-oncology, school education, and consumer decision-making. You can find some of my articles here.

I prefer to supervise projects that are closely related to my research and teaching expertise. However, I can also supervise projects within broader areas of cognitive psychology, neuropsychology, psycho-oncology, and rehabilitation of cognitive and motor functions. If you choose a topic outside my main areas of expertise, I will of course still support you with the research process, but the amount of guidance I can provide on the theoretical background may be limited.

I am happy to supervise both theoretical and empirical projects. For example, if you are interested in conducting an eye-tracking study, I would be glad to support you through the process of designing, conducting, and analysing such a study.

Supervision and feedback

I see supervision as a collaboration in which you remain the main author and decision-maker. You are responsible for the overall content, structure, writing, timeline of your project, and ultimately for the final product. My role is to provide guidance, feedback, and a different perspective, and to help you develop your ideas and make informed decisions.

During our meetings, we can discuss specific parts of your work as well as broader questions about the project, such as its theoretical framework, structure, methodology, and interpretation of results. If you would like detailed feedback on a particular piece of writing, please send it to me sufficiently in advance, ideally at least three days before our meeting. This gives me enough time to read it carefully and provide more useful and detailed feedback.

Meetings and communication

I usually organise supervision through individual meetings held regularly, approximately every 3–4 weeks. The exact frequency can be adjusted depending on the stage of your project and your needs.

You are also very welcome to email me between meetings if you have a specific question or run into a problem that would benefit from a quick discussion. You do not need to wait until our next scheduled meeting for every question.

You can write your thesis in either Danish or English. The same applies to our supervision: you are welcome to communicate with me in either Danish or English, depending on what you are most comfortable with.

Getting in touch

The easiest and preferred way to contact me is by email. You are also welcome to stop by my office if you have a quick question or would like to discuss something briefly. For longer discussions or questions that require more time, it is usually best to arrange a meeting.

I look forward to working with you! Feel free to write to me whenever you have questions, come up with an idea you would like to discuss, or simply feel that you are a little stuck. I am happy to help you think things through.

Best,
Anna
